

Topic: Rule confidentiality
Cañgu Capa group 26

A) The rule of confidentiality in bioethics is primarily based on the principle of respect for autonomy, which emphasizes the importance of individuals' rights to make informed decisions about their health and medical information without fear of disclosure to others without their consent.

- B)
- 1) Respect individual autonomy and decision-making
 - 2) Ensure that individuals have the right to make informed choices about their own medical care
 - 3) protect individuals from unwanted intervention or treatments.
 - 4) Foster trust and communication between healthcare providers and patients.
 - 5) uphold ethical standards and human right in medical practice