2. yes it is possible to have a situation in which not existing at all (as distinguished from death) is better than living.

In cases of severe genetic disorders or on-treatable terminal illness, where the quality of life for the individual is extremely poor and there is no hope for improvement, it can be argued that non-existence would have been a better outcome.

This is because the individual is spared from a life of pain suffering and disability and they loved ones are spared the burden of witnessing their decline.
